THE SHOWCASE THE RANGE GRILL + GOLF

Slingshot Architecture hit a hole-in-one with the the Range Grill + Golf restaurant having created a head-turning combination of color and form.

Restaurant owner Steve Garrels dreamed of combining a virtual country club (minus the membership fees) with an upscale American bar and grill in the bustling northwest Des Moines suburb of Urbandale, Iowa.

Des Moines-based Slingshot Architecture translated Garrels' vision into a distinct, beautiful and functional building.

Greg Wattier, Slingshot's senior principal architect, said the three brick colors represent the different aspects of the business – golf simulators, restaurant and bar – stitched together by metal and wood elements.

"We wanted each masonry form to read as a solid mass," Wattier said. "We then further defined the restaurant form and entry area with a change in masonry color and patterning."

Vintage Black - Velour

Revere Pewter - Velour

Plum - Velour

TCC Materials sold the mortar for the Range Grill + Golf. Pyramid Masonry used Prism P4540 Mink mortar to lay the Plum velour brick and Prism P9140 Gun Metal mortar to lay both the Revere Pewter and Vintage Black velour brick.

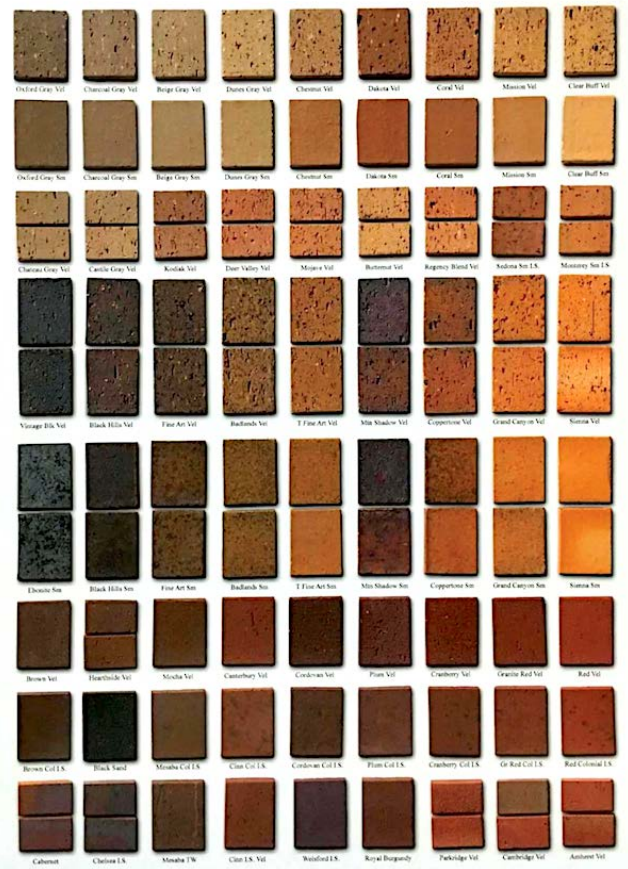

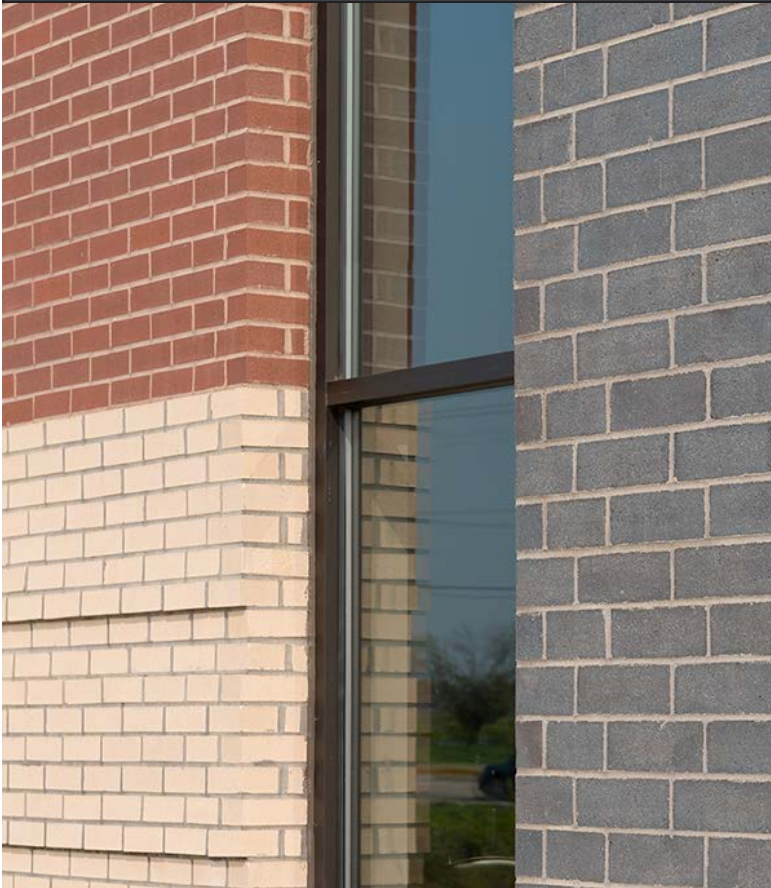

Slingshot Architecture continued the design concept with interior brick accent walls.

Range Grill + Golf patrons can play 9 or 18 holes year round at six golf simulators while quaffing craft beer and noshing New York strip steaks or seared scallops. The cost of a round, which starts at $45, varies depending on the simulator chosen and amount of time needed to finish the game.

Slingshot defined the restaurant and entry area with changes in masonry color and patterning.
